

DIAGNOSTIC TEST

60-minute baseline: Vocabulary 7, Grammar 8, Reading 13, Writing 20, Speaking 12 minutes.

The writing task has a deliberately shortened diagnostic time; it is not a full 50-minute Writing component. Record completion and the causes of errors, not an invented CEFR conversion. Keep solutions closed until the end.

D. The format does not suit everyone

E. Choosing a personal pace

F. A conversation changes the experience

G. Work behind the visible activity

H. Numbers used for a limited purpose

1. The notice for the Saturday run promised neither prizes nor a finishing order. Participants could run, jog or walk the same short route. For Daniel, who had avoided organised sport since school, that wording mattered more than the distance. It suggested that arriving last would not mean failing.

2. At the start, a volunteer explained that faster participants should leave space for others. Daniel initially tried to keep up with someone ahead, then slowed down enough to speak comfortably. Nobody told him that this was a disappointing choice. The activity allowed him to adjust his effort rather than follow somebody else's target.

3. Before anyone arrived, volunteers had checked the path and placed signs at two turns. Others remained at the finish to welcome participants and collect equipment. Running was only one way to contribute. A person who could not join the route could still be essential to making the morning work.

4. The organisers counted participants to understand how much space and support the event needed. They did not publish a ranked list. This distinction helped Daniel accept being counted: the number served an operational purpose without turning his morning into a public comparison with people who had different experience and goals.

5. Halfway round, Daniel began talking to another walker about a building beside the path. The conversation made him notice his surroundings instead of repeatedly checking how far remained. He had expected exercise to be the main reason to return. The chance of an undemanding conversation became equally important.

6. Some experienced runners preferred events with recorded times and competitive targets. The organisers did not claim their approach was better for every person. They were offering a different kind of occasion. A clear description helped people choose whether it matched what they wanted, without presenting competition itself as a problem.

7. Daniel came back the following week and recognised several faces. He had not suddenly become an enthusiastic athlete, and he did not plan to enter a race. The meaningful change was smaller: he had found an activity he was willing to repeat. For him, consistency mattered more than a dramatic first performance.

W1D1-DIAG-E04 | WRITING PART 4 | 20 min

You have joined a community garden.

Announcement

The garden is replacing individual planting beds with shared plots next season. Current members may help design the shared layout, but separate beds will no longer be available.

W1D1-DIAG-E04-Q01 | 40-50 words

Email a friend in the garden. Explain your reaction to the shared plots and suggest how to take part in planning.

W1D1-DIAG-E04-Q02 | 120-150 words

Email the garden coordinator. Explain a benefit and a concern about shared plots, then request a practical arrangement for dividing responsibilities.

W1D1-DIAG-E05 | SPEAKING | 12 min

Use the full timed sequence. Parts 1-3: no preparation pause. Part 1: 30 seconds per response. Parts 2-3: 45 seconds per response. Part 4: 1 minute preparation and one 2-minute response covering all three questions.
